James, a Scottish boy, lived in a very small town with his mother, father and two younger sisters. James's father was a school teacher and his mother was a nurse.

School was starting soon, and it was necessary to get new clothes for each child. They did it every year. One day mother said, "It is a good day for school shopping." Beth and Carole were happy to go to the big city mall but James wanted to stay at home and ride his bicycle.

James was very tired when he was walking with his sisters around the shopping centre. At last the mother and kids came to a boy's shop. The mother bought a new shirt, new shoes and green trousers for James. He didn't like the shirt much. He didn't like the shoes much but he liked the green trousers.

School started the following Monday, and James put on his new green trousers. All the other kids had new clothes too. James thought that his green trousers were the best. He wore his green pants every day. His mother looked at him with a smile every morning at breakfast, but said, "Well, as long as your trousers are clean, I think it's OK."

Soon the school year finished. James still wore his green trousers, but there was one problem. He had got taller in the last year and his green trousers became very short for him. Girls began to laugh at him.
